Generous Donors

I will always credit UH for affording me great opportunities and a successful career. I believe there are times when students need legitimate support, and if we have the means to provide those resources, we should play an integral role. The University is on an impressive, upward trajectory right now, and is positioned to be one state. Contributing to this journey is something that I welcome.”

Gregory S. Perrin ('92, MFA '95)

I believe that undergraduate research at UH serves as a great differentiator because it allows students to apply their knowledge on groundbreaking work. If we can provide opportunities that expose students to new ways of thinking, we are helping ensure their long-term success. UH students tend to be very hardworking, capable people that, when given the proper resources and/or services, will not disappoint. To this end, when you give back, you are receiving a very high return on investment.”

Stephen Harper ('91)

Being a first generation college student, I was not able to take advantage of the full UH experience when I attended UH. While UH has grown tremendously since my time there, it still offers that community-like atmosphere that makes you feel very connected. It is this connection and providing opportunities to others that inspires me to give back.”

Grateful Students

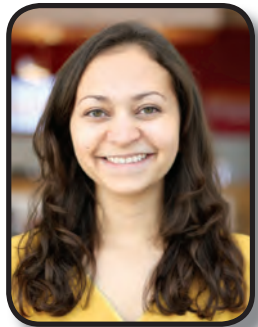

I don't think the giving community realizes how much they positively impact the overall college experience. For me, a huge weight was lifted as a result of my UH scholarship; from financial obstacles to housing concerns. The opportunities that have been afforded to me as a result have shaped my leadership development and confidence. My life has been forever-changed, and I am truly grateful.”

Jessica King ('20)

The small class size and the mentorship I received from my professor made my time in undergraduate research much more personable. I consider the first-hand experience as invaluable in helping me grow, both as a student and researcher. By investing in undergraduate research, the giving community is supporting scientific innovation. The work of students is of high caliber and contributes to the scientific community.”

Francisco Blanco ('17)

The impact that my scholarships have had on my UH experience is indescribable. Thanks to the giving community, the University is able to offer programs that are not just classes but real experiences. It is nice to know that you have an external support system that is encouraging you and looking out for your best interests. This makes me want to give back someday.”
